ADVANCED QUANTITATIVE METHODS (AQM) PROGRAM IN EDUCATION RESEARCH AT UCLA

- Do you have a background in Psychology, Education, Mathematics, Statistics, Social Policy or Engineering? Looking for interesting areas of application for your quantitative skills?
- Do you want to become an expert using data to solve the most pressing problems in education policy? Or even improve the statistical methods used by education researchers and policymakers?
- Looking for a world-class graduate education, with outstanding financial support, and exciting career opportunities in academia, research, the private sector and government upon graduation?

The UCLA Graduate School of Education & Information Studies and the UCLA Department of Psychology is an interdisciplinary doctoral training program dedicated to producing world-class quantitative educational researchers offering advanced training in research design, statistics, and educational policy issues, and to provide practical research experience with complex, real-world educational issues and problems.

- Receive a guaranteed stipend starting at $30,000/year for multiple years, plus coverage of tuition, health/fees, travel & research expenses.
- Undergraduate or Master's degrees in education, psychology, education, mathematics, statistics, sciences, social sciences, or humanities may apply.
- Accepting applications! File by December 1, 2009 deadline for admission in Fall 2010.
